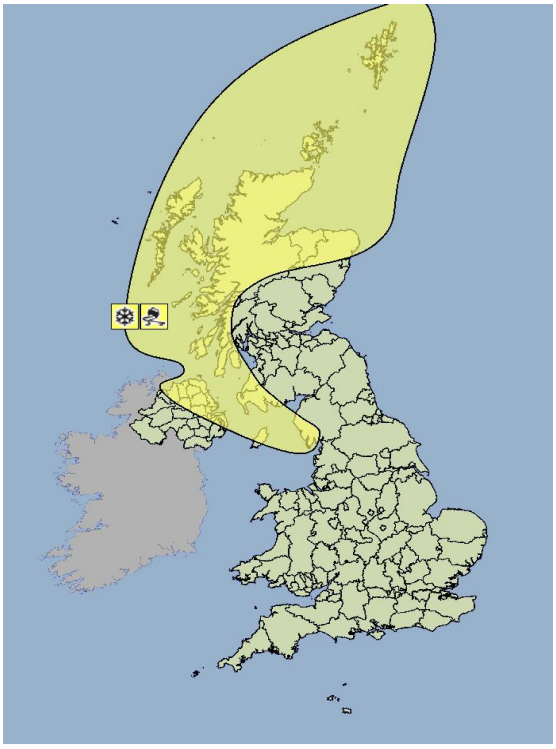
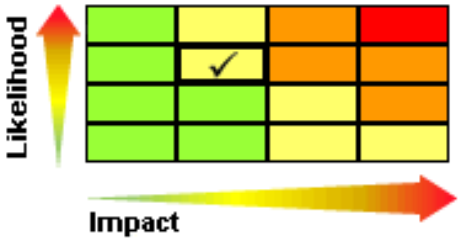
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Saturday's wintry showers gradually become confined to the far north of Scotland overnight. Showers will also gradually become less heavy than they have been during the last couple of days. At the same time, accumulations become increasingly confined to hills and mountains with little snow likely at low levels by the early hours of Sunday. Amounts of snow building up overnight may vary across short distances.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 18:00 on Sat, 09th Dec 2017 until 12:00 on Sun, 10th Dec 2017

Wintry showers will gradually become confined to the far north of Scotland overnight. A further 2-5 cm of snow is likely over parts of northern Scotland with 5-10 cm possible over some mountains. Icy surfaces are also likely to be an additional hazard.

Impacts include probably some icy patches on some untreated roads, pavements and cycle paths and some roads likely to be affected with longer journey times by road and bus services.
